Assistant Adjutant General

(Seal of State of Vermont)

(In applying for D. A. R. membership insert only services and refer to Miss Aldyth E. Nichols, Bainbridge, N. Y., giving her D. A. R. No. 196327, Bainbridge, Chapter was Ag-wrondoug, Bainbridge, N. Y. This reference will hasten papers through.)

If you wish to trace back to Richard in your D. A. R. papers. For Jemima Morris refer to "Descendants of Edwrad Morris of Roxbury" other refer to Vital Records of Reading and Ispwich and see dates after Richard to James in Revolutionary papers. (James 4th in Genealogical record.)

Descendants of Samuel and Luke are eligable as Daughters of 1812. Former Pay Master of Militia later as Drum-major John, Captain of a company of Militia in 1812, probably Secretary of State, (N. Y.) could furnish his record to service, Benjamin would have to be looked up at Albany, N. Y.

Extracts from "Nichols Family in America"

On the northern side of France in Normandy, extending out into the channel toward the south coast of England, is the peninsula Cotentin, which in the nineth century was ruled by the Viscounts who gave allegiance to the dukes of Normandy. The first of these Viscounts was Richard, an own cousin of Rollo, the first Duke of Normandy. Their grandfather, Euslin Glumru, was one of the great Vikings and Jarl of Upland or Earl over a large area of eastern Norway. In the days when the Norse were carrying their raids to all the western European shores, and substituting authority and energy for anarchy and degenerate social life, then it was that Rollo made his conquest along the French coast and peopled it with a hardy and energitic race that set a new pace for the development of civilization. Rollo's own cousin, Richard, established himself in possession of the Cotentin and the Channel Islands. Richard's son, Nigel, or Neel, succeeded as the second Viscount, and thus began a name that has been familiar in British and American life in the succeeding centuries.

These early Viscounts became Christianized and adopted other phases of the higher culture of France. They gave in turn a greater energy and a clearer vision of the vital things needed in their century. So enthusiastic was their Christianity that the great castle they built near the Douve River was named Saint Sauveur (Holy Saviour). The ruins of this earliest Architecture of the family may yet be seen.

Roger (3), son of Nigel (1), succeeded his father and named his son Nigel II or Neel. Nigel II died in 1048 leaving 3 sons; Nigel, Richard and Mauger. The oldest became Nigel III. There were at least 3 sons of Nigel III: Nigel, William and Roger. These three sons took their name from the town Aubigny or Albini. The name is also called De Aubingy D'aubigny, and Daubeny. Roger, the 3rd son of Nigel, had two sons; William and Nigel. William became Pincerna (now equivalent to a Commissary General) to William the Conqueror, accompanying him to England, where his descendants married into the House of Arundel (Jonas Eaton Line.) Nigel, or Nicol in England, led one wing of William the Conqueror's army at Hastings, 1066, and was rewarded for his services by gifts of lands and Honored with titles. In Bedford he became Baron of Cainhoe and Clophill. Nicol de Albini was one of the military leaders to rid England of her invaders. In 1074 the Norman-English army met the Norse host off Cardiff, South Wales. Here Neel St. Sauveur, our first Lord of Cainhoe, lost his life. His remains were taken back to Normandy for burial. The second Lord of Cainhoe, he had five sons; Nicol 3rd, William, Itel., Henry and Roger, He held much land as shown in Doomsday Survey. In 1092 a civil conflict arose in Wales and young Lord of Cainhoe lost his life in Glamorganshire. Nicol, the 3rd Lord of Cainhoe, died without issue in 1128.

His cousin, Robert, son of his uncle Henry, became the new Lord of Cainhoe, founding the priory of Beaulieu in Hereford, near South Wales. Then followed Robert's son Robert in 1193 and after him, his son Robert who died in infancy, leaving great baronies to be divided among his three sisters, Isabel, Joan and Christina. Isabel, wife of William de Hocton, took Cainhoe, Clophill, Ampthill, Melbroke, and some other lands, mainly in Bedfordshire. William de Hocton assumed the name of William de Albini from his wife's possessions. He died about 1264 and their son Simon de Albini inherited all of his parent's manors. He died without issue about 1307, thus ending the Lords of Cainhoe.

When and where the Nichols broke away from the Lords of Cainhoe and what branches we do not know. Refer to Victoria edition history Bedfordshire, volume 1, page 321-322). To the east of Cainhoe not over thirty miles at Walden in Essex, lived Dr. John Nicole, as early as 1450, or perhaps 1400. He we ancestor of a Nichol line traceable for more than two centuries; the probable ancestor of east of England Nichols line. Here is only about a century to connect with the Lords of Cainhoe but the links are wanting. (By Leon N. Nichols).

From "Nichols' Family in America" by Leon Nelson Nichols of the New York Public Library, the following is quoted. "Richard Nichols of Ispwich, who died in 1674, was the founder of a line of uniformly high characters, and has increased in prominence during the nineteenth century." See Richard Nichols of Ispwich.

CANIHOE CASTLE

In an article on ancient earthworks, it says, "Cainhoe Castle near Clophill. This strong little work stands on a spur of high ground artifically scarped on the north down towards a small stream which partially envelopes it, in old days probably making much marsh arount it. The site is commanded by a superior height about eighty yards to the eastward. This may point to the construction of the place before the common use of siege engines."

"The central mound is small, but its rounded shape arise well above all the rest of the defences, and it is surrounded by a deep fosse some forty feet wide, except to the north, where it turns out into the steep scarp. This fosse could therefore never have held water. There are two considerable wards to the east and south facing the superior heights divided by a fosse which also continues along the greater part of this frontage, which is defended by a strong rampart. The entrance appears to have been on the west side, where the ground slopes to a re-entering angle, between a small mounded projection on the north and a large rounded platform, about one hundred feet across, on the south.

"There are no signs of ramparts on either but when stockaded they completely commanded approach. They were separated from the mound and southward by the interior moats, and are joined together at the rear by a small platform, slightly lower, which blocked the approach and may have formed the abutment for a flying bridge of timber to the keep-mound. A considerable portion of the lower slope of the ground is enclosed by the outer enceinte, with traces of rampart and ditch. At the western angle is a long piece of standing water towards which the outer lines are tending. There is no church or village here." (Victoria History, Bedford, Vol. 1, page 291-2.)

At the time of the Doomsday Survey, Nigel de Albini held the manor of Cainhoe and the manor of Clophill. These two manors had always been held together and became known as Cainhoe and Clophill.

That of Clophill assessed at four hides, had been held by two thengs of Earl Tosig, Harold's brother, while the manor of Cainhoe, was assessed at five hides, had been held by Alveric, a theng of Edward the Confessor. The fine earthworks of Cainhoe Castle before described is in the south of the parish and on rising ground. A short distance to the south is Cainhoe farm on which is an H shaped house. From time to time the foundations have been traced by occupants of the farm. (Victoria History of Bedfordshire, Vol. 1, pages 321-322).

The writer has mention by Mrs. C. S. Vernill (901 The Boulevard, North Vancouver, B. C., Canada), of lands given by Nigel, (Nicol) de Albini, 2nd Lord of Cainhoe to his son Roger Mowbray situated in Carlton, Sifton, Kefwich, Norton, Dale and Homby.

Sealed with the Rampart Lion.

ARUNDEL CASTLE

The manor of Arundel was given by Alfred the Great to his nephew Aethelf, son of his brother.

The stately splendor of Arundel formed a striking contrast to the crumbling ruins of Pevensel, described in a previous chapter. Yet both castles were of equal rank and importance. Each was a principal seat of one of the six rapes, into which the land of the South Saxons was longitudinally divided—the site of the one flat and depending for its protection on the sea and on the adjacent marshes; that of the other and defended on the East and South by the natural steepness of its sides, and on the North and West by artificial ditches. To the Northwest a deep fosse cuts off the extremity of the platform from the rest of the ground, and within this the castle is built; while farther inland, beyond the park, are other lines of entrenchments much older than the Normans castle, which may have been executed in prehistoric times. The Normans were ever ready to turn such sites to account, and here Roger of Montgomery, to whom the Lordship had been granted by the Conqueror, threw up his mound and built his castle. Of Norman castle there remains the keep, the lower part of the gatehouse next to the ward, part of Bevis tower, and a portion of the basement on the south side of the ward.

The tower contains two floors, but the upper part was rebuilt at the end of the thirteenth century by Richard Fitz Alan, Seventh Earl of Arundel. Such was the keep as it stood in the time of Henry the 2nd. The descent of the castle to its present possessor may be stated. On th death of Roger of Montgomery in 1094 it passed to his son Hugh, Earl of Shrewsbury, and then to Hugh's elder brother, Robert of Belesme, the supporter of Robert of Normandy, and the constant opponent of Henry the 1st. On his submission in 1102 he was deprived of his English estates, and Arundel became a royal castle.. Henry's widow, Adeliza of Louvain brought it to her second husband, William de Albini, from whom the present Duke of Norfolk is lineally descended. Isabel, the great granddaughter of William de Albini, brought Arundel to John Fitz Alan, her husband, and in 1234 their son John became Earl of Arundel. For the next 300 years the castle remained in the family, but in the year 1580, on the death of the last Fitz Alan without issue, it came to Philip Howard, son of his daughter Mary, who had married Thomas Howard. (From "The Castle of England and Wales.")

The keep was the great attraction of the castle of Arundel, though now a picturesque ruin. It has been prominent in all the great contest of the kingdom from the time of Alfred the Great to the third William. (From "Stately Castles in England.")

MORRICES

Burke in his Comoner Vol, III page 232 says "The Family of Morrices (Morris) is of great antiquity and can be traced in a lineal line from Athelstane Glodydd, Prince of Felix betwixt the Wye and Severn Rivers who sprang from the old Prince of Powys and through his mother, Rheingar daughter and heir of Grow Ap Tudor was eight in descent in a direct line from Cardoc Viehfras, Lord of Herlford. One of the knights of King Arthur's Round Table Athelston Glodrydd was god son of Athelstan, King of England and founder of the fourth Royal tribe of Wales. He married Gwladys' daughter and heir of Ruh, Lord of Pegin and father of Cadwygan ap Elystan who married Ellen, daughter of Brochwell, Lord of Powys and had son Hoelwin of Cadwgan, Lord of Radnor, Prince of Felix. "From Lewys Dwinn Visitations of Wales," Vol. 1P297-8 the following descent from Teon Arch bishop of Gloucester, 533 A. D. William Morris ancestor of Morrices of Belshanger CoKent, England he was 35 generations from Teon, (these are too long to copy GEN). Our Edward Morris was born near CoKent was probably this line.

Lucy Ann (Morris) Carhart author of Morris and Family in America" 1911) PPVII.VIII.VIII considers all Morrices of Welsh orgin. Certainly Edward Morris of Roxbury intermarried with the Welsh. Further research might prove Edward Morris was of this line. "(Descendant of Edward Morris of Roxbury was written twenty-five years before this Carharts Morris and Family in America). Thomas Morris, was son of Thomas Morris who with (who was 37 generations from Teon) his wife Elizabeth Morris (as second wife) came to Boston in ship, Hector, arriving June 28, 1637, place of his emmigration not stated.

Other authorities Burke's "Dormant and Extinct Peerages" Burkes "landed Gentry" 1894, Vol. P1437. Storers "Cathedrals of Great Britian," Savage Genealogical Dictionary, Vol.

3P 236. The Morris information was given the writer by Marion P. Wilsey, Genealogical Section,- State Library, Albany, New York.

"Morris Family" by Carhart was written twenty-five years after "Descendants of Edward Morris" by Jonathan and Flint Morris.

COLONIAL RECORDS

In King Philip War, John Thomas, James Nichols, Joshua Eaton, Edward Morris, Henry Bowen, Capt. William French, Capt. Isaac Johnson, James Draper, 2nd, John Polly, 2nd, Jonathan Pool, (for later see No. 59, Colonial Dames Page 53, 1909), John Lyon.

Members of General court, Joshua Eaton, Thomas Eaton, Jonathan Pool, Edward Morris 1st, 2nd, 3rd, John Johnson who was also Surveyor General of arms and ammunitions.

Members Ancient Artillery Company, John Johnson, William Lyon 2nd, Isaac Johnson.

"Town Officers" may be anything, constable to Selectman, John Dwight, Nathaniel Whiting, Francis Kendall.

Edward Morris 1st, 2nd. and 3rd served the colonies son following father in some colonial office served successively 1663 to 1748. Selectman, General Count, Seveyor and so forth and their services would fill over one page.

Material is here for Daughters of Colonial Wars. Colonial Dames and of American Colonists.

The writer is not familiar with credentials.

Applicant must get in touch with various societies.

Probably above societies most easily joined through James Nichols 1st and Jonathan Pool by referring to Vital Records of Reading and through Jemima Morris refer to "Genealogy of Edward Morris of Roxbury."

Then see Genealogies of William Lyon, James Draper, Nathaniel Whiting perhaps others.

Bainbridge.

May the 12, 1845.

To Mrs. Dolly Nichols.

They are all well here but myself. I am now past labour as I expect this letter will find you by what I have heard and I don't expect ever to see you in this world. But I hope we shall meet in that upper and better world where we shall sing the song of Moses and lamb with those happy spirits of the Lord. I don't ever expect to hear that your alive again as I understand that you are very feeble and low at present. And as both of us has lived beyond the common age of mankind and we can't expect to stay long here in this world of sorrow, my dear sister in Christ, hold on to the Saviour and put your whole trust in him though friends and kindred forsake you but he will not forsake you but will be found of you if you will put your trust in him. I should like to see you very much but as we live so far apart I expect never to see you in this world again. Tell Bernetty to get some dandelion roots and tops and boil them up and then boil the juice and make pills of it and take three or four of them a day and if the complaint is what I have heard it was, it will helpe you I think.

A few lines to Uncle Samuel

Dear Brother: I take this opportunity to inform you that my health is very poor this spring but I hope these line which I am about to send to you will find you in good health and I send my love to you in particular and to all the rest of my folks there and I should be happy to see you once more on this side of the grave. But you will have to come hear for I can't get there to see you. I want you or some one to write to me as soon as you receive this and let me no how Aunt Dolly is and how she gets along. I don't know but you think that I have forgot all about you there. But I can tell you that you are as fresh to my mind as you ever was in this world. And I take a great deal of comfort in reading Whitfield's sermons and I think that I have it nearly twelve times though by course for I don't do nothing else but to read that and the Bible and Mister Finny's sermons at present. As I have wrote pretty much all that I can think of now I shall wright to you about them all. Uncle John and Aunt Susy is smart for them this spring. They are going to stay hear a year and how much longer I don't know. Uncle Ben and Aunt Pheobe is as well as usual this spring. They live heare on the farm alone yet. They have got two of Uncle John's children with them. Uncle Luke is very well I believe but Aunt Polly is not very well this spring, but the rest of them enjoys good health I believe. Dolly was in yesterday. She was as lively as a bird apparently. She went down to see Betsey last winter and the snow went off and left them in the mud and she says that she had such an awful time a getting home she does not feel able to go down there this summer. It has been quite sickly in these parts for a year past and a good many deaths but the folks are all well as common now I think and as I can not think of anything more I shall have to bring my letter to a close.

Jemima Newton

Below is a list of those who contributed toward the Bronze Marker for James Nichols together with their families. Probably ninety per cent the writer could reach by letters have contributed. Especial credit should be given Bertha Allen for cooperation. Follow by number; thus (2) are brothers and sisters (3) are own cousins. In the division of families (4) are either second or third cousins as one may term relationship or (4) are brothers and sisters in the subdivision of families, (5) and (6) are some relation in their families as (3 and (4) above. (7) is not much related only to their own family and are 25/32nd of the blood of James Nichols, intermarriages excepected.

Authorities differ on Richard Nichols Encycolopedia and Genealogy of Mass., places him at Ispwich in 1638 as a freeman in that case he must have been born as early as 1617.

The Boston Public Library of "Nov. 28, 1923," "one thing is certain he settled at Ispwilh 1648."

The writer would have been glad to given full dates of birth, marriages, deaths. It would almost have doubled space and cost of printing. Space has been sacrificed to save cost. I think by following by numbers each family will be plain also to other families.

If this work is appreciated spare copies will be sold for $1.10, proceeds turned over to North Afton Cemetery Association.

Ring actual size

14 Karat ring Albini coat of arms initials engraved $14.00.

10 Karat ring Albini coat of arms initials engraved $10.00.

On condition an order of 10 rings is received, the writer will receive order for first 10, then forward the order sent to J. E. Cadwell & Co., Philadelphia, Pa., Corner of Chestnut St., and Juniper St. They will notify persons ordering. Those ordering can forward price and Engraved as per photo. Thereafter rings can be ordered singly direct from Cadwell & Co.

P. S. Leon Nelson Nichols says "Two lines from Richard of Ispwich came to Rhole Island early in 1700, they proved fully equal to Welch Nichols' who settled there—Itel son of Nigel III settled in Wales: by tenure of Welch lands encesty is more easily traced: the Welch Nichols trace almost unbroken to Itel de Albini."
